Receipt of a Mashed Battery by Brownlow. [From the Knoxville Whig.]

One day last week, the Southern mail brought us a small package, done up precisely like a newspaper, and about equal in size to one of our exchanges, with the usual endorsement, "Brownlow's Whig, Knoxville, Tennessee," and postpaid .-Upon opening it, we found it to contain about half a yard of brown domestic, with blood, and scabs upon it, resembling a cloth taken from some one afflicted with small pox. We had it burned in the front yard of our Printing Office, after handling it with tongs! This is the spirit of Secession-its mode of warfare-and its sense of honor. Clever men, heretofore high minded, will not be long in their ranks until they will openly justify even this mode of warfare against Union men.

This attempt at our death, by the plant ing of a masked battery, manned by the ubiquitious spirit of Secession, entitles the cowardly villain who did it, to the honor of being pickited in the deepest gorge leading to hell! Not only so, but should be required to make nightly advances upon the ambusondes of the Devil; and every morning of his life, by way of healthful exercise, he should make a reconnoisance of the damned, having the entire control of the guerrilla rebels of the infernal
